Description Coming Soon

Presenter: Coming Soon

Using Communications to Build Pathways Engagement 10:00 AM - 1:00 PM

Without effective communications, even the most robust guided pathways planning will have limited impact. This hands-on workshop teaches fundamental communications strategies, provides opportunities for colleges to begin using them, and helps each college identify clear next steps for action once they return to their campuses. Each college will focus on its specific communications needs. And each college will leave the session with the beginning of a strategic communications plan tied to at least one of its organizational goals.

NCII Guided Pathways Resource Series #4

Key Decisions for Colleges Transforming the Student Experience through Guided Pathways

Version 1.0 - August 2019; Prepared by NCII with input from AACCC, CCRC, and CCSSE

 NATIONAL CENTER FOR INQUIRY & IMPROVEMENT

Introduction

Over the past few years, NCII and its guided pathways partners have served hundreds of institutions that are at various stages of exploring, designing, and implementing guided pathways. In many of the conversations that we have observed and facilitated with diverse college teams over these years, we have noticed similar threads of conversation and common decisions that colleges need to make in advance of rolling out their initial version of guided pathways at scale. While the array of potential decisions that could be made under a guided pathways framework is vast, we have provided a brief list of decisions that need to be made to truly transform the student experience at scale.

We also note that colleges' approaches to these key questions should evolve over time, from the initial rollout of guided pathways to version 2.0 and beyond. This evolution should be driven by ongoing assessment and evaluation of the effects of the rollout on the student experience, key momentum metrics and the institution itself (e.g. culture, engagement, professional development)—all serving the superordinate goal of ensuring equitable achievement of students' educational and career goals.

Note that we aren't providing answers to these decisions—we think there is a range of potential approaches that could address these questions and the college is best suited to design approaches that fit the college culture. As an organizing aid, we are using the four stages of the Loss/Momentum Framework¹ from Completion by Design, which helps to make key college guided pathways decisions across the full span of the student journey. Note that we are using a more recently updated version of the four stages from the Community College Research Center (CCRC) that combines the Progress and Completion stages and adds Advancement as the new fourth stage.

Decisions to be Made at Stage 1: Connection

- How do we deepen the college's relationship with our K-12 partners to ensure early exploration of careers and college programs? How will we inform our K-12 partners about guided pathways-related changes at the college such as metamajors and first-semester / first-year experiences?
- How does recruiting change when we are intentionally recruiting into metamajors and/or program of study vs. into the college in general? How do we ensure that recruiting and initial advising efforts promote equitable access to programs that lead to jobs and transfer in high-opportunity fields?
- How does the application process change when we roll out pathways?
- Under a guided pathways approach, how does the college respond intentionally to a student who has applied? Which key steps should be added / eliminated / revised?
- How does the college immediately begin to build the new student's sense of connection and belonging to the college?
- How do we ensure that students have the information they need to make an initial decision among metamajors? How do we ensure students understand the impact and consequences of their decision, as well as the ability to make changes?
